Be sure that your multimedia computer meets at least the system requirements specified on the box, that you have properly installed the product according to the instructions given, that you have reset your monitor to at least 32,000 colors (640x480) and that you have connected and turned on your speakers.

Your software has been checked thoroughly for defects, but some of you may come across several problems related to other software and hardware issues which cannot be adequately addressed in the setup procedure.

1. You encounter the error message related to the peripheral MCI:

Especially in the case of Windows95 users, you must verify that all necessary multimedia extensions have been properly installed, including the audio codes. In case of doubt, use your Windows95 installation disks to reinstall the « Multimedia » extensions (which include the « audio codes », which when missing leads to the MCI message).

2. You encounter the error message « Cannot find c:\win\MTBTRUN.EXE »:

This message relates to the fact that another product using an Anywhere runtime has been incorrectly de-installed from your computer. To get rid of the offending element, use the File Manager/Explorer to enter c:\windows and look for the file « mysmun ». Delete it, reboot and recommence the installation of « Mythia ».

3. You can't start the program and encounter an error message related to QuickTime for Windows which includes the text « dyntest »:

This message relates to the incompatibility of certain older versions of Apple's QuickTime for Windows which you have installed with other products. To get rid of the offending element, use the File Manager/Explorer to enter c:\windows\system and look for all files that either end in « QTC » or that start with « QT* ». Delete them all, reboot and restart « Mythia » (no need to reinstall).

Note: If you happen to have a copy of Apple's QuickTime for Windows 2.0 or later provided with another multimedia product that requires that runtime, installing it automatically removes the offending elements. You can also contact Apple on CompuServe and other internet-related services.

4. The graphics are not coming up correctly:

Either you have not set your monitor to at least 32,000 colors or you have an older graphics card.

To reset your monitor, consult the documentation provided with Windows, your computer and/or your graphics card. In the case you cannot find the necessary driver, consult the manufacturers of the card or your computer store. You may also be able to find help on CompuServe and other internet-related services.
